Attends Training Program

Miss Flora B. Williams

Miss Flora Belle Williams, of Pamplin, who served as teacher and then principal in Virginia schools for almost 50 years, recently attended a pioneer training program for persons with visual handicaps.

Nine visually handicapped Virginians, eight of them legally blind, "proved themselves more adaptable to the problems of everyday living than some sighted persons" according to a report from the Roanoke Times of Feb. 15.

The two-week residential adjustment program was the first of its kind in the state.

"The pilot group project held in Wytheville is among the first of its kind in the nation," said Roy J. Ward, of Richmond, supervisor of rehabilitation teachers of the Virginia Commission for the Visually Handicapped.

The two weeks of special training will be followed by rehabilitation teachers working or continuing to work with the individuals in their homes.

The training session is used to evaluate and provide instruction in daily living, mobility -- independent travel, communications, home making, recreation -- crafts and minor household repair and maintenance skills.

Miss Williams taught in Charlotte, Henrico, Bedford counties and for the last 30 years in Appomattox -- eight of these as principal of the Appomattox Elementary School -- retiring in 1963. It was during these last years she started having trouble with one eye which alternately improved and worsened.

"On Easter morning of 1964, I woke up with blurred vision in both eyes, and from then on they got worse until I became blind," said Miss Williams to the Roanoke interviewer.

"I was always a cheerful person, always smiling. And although I never married and had had children of my own, through all the years of teaching I had many, many wonderful 'children' who brought much happiness," she added.

For almost six years Miss Williams had fought her handicap and its many related emotional problems by herself. The pilot training session in Wytheville was her first.

"This is the first happiness I've known in a long time and they have given me so much hope," said Miss Williams.

"Now I feel like my own happy self again and I am going to take it home with me," she declared, "Plus a new freedom and lease on life made possible by the independence and confidence gained during this two-week session."

Miss Williams, has had some difficulty falling the past few years but her classmates reported she was "the belle of the ball" during a recreation dance session at the hotel.

As the feature writer in the Times pommented, "The eyes are not necessarily the windows of our soul nor the key to mobility, ability and potential."

Dinner Honors Couple

Mr. and Mrs. Clifford E. Franklin of Appomattox were surrounded by friends during dinner given earlier this month at the Parkway in their honor and to mark the retirement of Mr. Franklin from the State Forest staff, Virginia Division of Forestry.

J. C. Hayes, retired superintendent, State Forests, was there. He first hired Mr. Franklin 22 years ago. George W. Dean, state forester, made a presentation of a certificate, appropriately framed in wormy chestnut rescued from timber used in constructing the Woodridge Wayside, near Holiday Lake, when the wayside rest spot was struck by a falling tree.

Ed Robertson, who has worked with Mr. Franklin many years, presented him with a camera from the Va. Div. of Forestry. Seth G. Howard, retired chief of management was there, also, as well as Wally Custard, present chief of management, Va. Div. of Forestry, and W. Chuck Stanley, present superintendent of State Forests. Many of the officials' wives were there and a large gathering enjoyed the buffet and fellowship.

The Franklins have four children, Betty, Wayne, Sonny, and Judith, Mrs. Franklin ("Florence") is employed at Appomattox Garment Company. They live in an attractive brick ranch home on Route 24 not far from the entrance to Holiday Lake.

Mr. Franklin, with a 22 year career as a tractor operator doing heavy logging work and working with heavy equipment, now faces a new challenge. The camera, a Polaroid, is something new in the way of "small equipment." He agrees that learning to operate it takes a "light touch."
